That said, you will not get more than 2 hits. I'd suggest not going for the Axe or a two handed weapon as the one handed are much more useful. Here's a good weapon (two handed): Good luck, and try to get the armor set. it is very useful for fights. I'd suggest not going for the Axe or a two handed weapon as the one handed are much more useful. It's always best to stay on the "safe" side with melee weapons and wait for the enemy to come to you. For example, when I am in a group and there is a group of reds on me, I will try to get the reds away by backing them up. In ESO, there is no advantage to attacking from range. The only advantage that can be gained is the ability to use traps. The other advantage is the different traps themselves. My favorite traps are light arrows, regular arrows, explosive arrows, acid arrows, damage bonuses, etc. I would recommend dropping the two handed weapons for the one handed weapons and then leveling up them. In the end, you will get a better two handed weapon than you would have leveled up the one handed weapon. Always keep your dagger in hand (on the opposite side of your hilt) and use the 2H weapon when the enemy comes close (circle left or right or back and forth). Use daggers/swords for two handed weapons when they have the highest attack power, but don't worry about the defence power. You will have no problem killing the enemies while avoiding the damage you get from their defence power. If you want to use a two handed weapon for the main hand and two daggers for the off hand, try to keep your defense up. At the moment, two handed weapons are too slow to counter enemies, they work best if you are the only one on the enemy. I suggest you have a two handed weapon and a dagger. if your an assassin with 2-3 shouts of moonlight or moondour if you want to get faster and stronger and just quick things... then this is the way to go. 82157476af
